

Scientific Justification for Pain Category E

Hamsters, a widely accepted model for acute leptospirosis, are exquisitely sensitive to Leptospira infection. The primary early symptom of infection is weight loss. To minimize distress, we have set a very conservative cut-off for weight loss (8-12%) as an indicator of potentially lethal infection. Animals that lose >12% will be euthanized. However, it is possible that some animals may succumb to infection very quickly even with careful monitoring. For this reason, we have placed hamsters used for Leptospira infection studies in Category E.